In mid-February TCEQ made the following statement in their response to public comments:

Lastly, the proposed guidelines will only potentially affect a small subset of plants in Texas. A search of TCEQ's emissions inventory shows between 27 and 50 plants that might potentially be subject to the guidance of the Ethylene Oxide ESL, of which only 11 had reportable quantities of emissions in 2017. The ESL guidance would only affect these plants should they make permitting changes to the facilities that produce or handle ethylene oxide after the proposed guidance is finalized.
